

CHC32015 CERTIFICATE III IN COMMUNITY SERVICES

If you are passionate about helping others, then the CHC32015 Certificate III in Community Services is the perfect opportunity for you. Work towards developing a rewarding career in the community and health care setting.

The Australian health care and social assistance sector is one of the largest growing areas in the country, and will make up a large contribution to employment growth as of May 2023. When coupled with the construction, education, and science sectors of Australian employment, these four industries are estimated to provide two-thirds of employment increase during this time .

This crucial sector of Australian living and employment is made up of a variety of services, such as the entire disability system, child protection and family services, homelessness, and sexual and domestic assault. Social and community workers have developed the essential and required skillset to work within these areas and be employed in one of the largest, and necessary, sectors in our country.

Community workers are those who are equipped with the knowledge, skill, and values to work with disadvantaged and marginalised individuals, families, social groups or communities to bolster, promote or restore social behaviours and function. These workers strive to minimise systematic barriers and to advocate for the basic rights of individuals and communities, ensuring the social and economic inclusivity of all citizens. This qualification will give you the required skillset and knowledge to make a substantial change in people's lives.

This qualification will help you build strong foundation skills through hands-on experience and engaging classes to give you the confidence to provide individualised support, respond to client needs, and work with a diverse range of people in the community sector.

This nationally accredited qualification provides the foundations required to upskill and pursue further course studies in the community and health care setting or go on to university.
